If two people want to climb a mountain together, what is the most important thing they need to get into the top? Is it the equipment? Or teamwork? Or favourable weather conditions? Of course, all these are needed. But the most important thing is the mountain itself. They need a clear goal.

Too often, we may get obsessed with the equipment and the training but have no clear goals. The best mountain climbing equipment is of little use if you don't have a mountain to climb.

Once you have your own mountain to climb, everything changes magically. You get a sense of purpose. You begin to want to climb to the peak. You become disciplined. You get up early, brave the cold, watch your diet, seek out experts, read books etc. All because you now have a mountain to climb, a peak to conquer.

It's easy to get caught up in the negative and start complaining. Instead of complaining about the equipment, training, or the system, set your own goal first. How do you get back on track and reach your goals? Ask yourself: What can I do to help myself reach that goal? You need to take responsibility for your own actions and make changes.

No one succeeds without a plan and without determination. Set your sights high and you'll achieve your goals. But there's a right way to go about it. You don't just jump in and start climbing. You take small steps that add up to something great. Let's get started.

Everyone has a limiting belief, or 'self-limiting belief'. For example, you may feel that you don't have what it takes to succeed. Or you may feel that you aren't good enough to become a good engineer. You may also have a limiting belief that you are not worthy of receiving abundance. This is because the people who believe these things about themselves are unwilling to explore their highest self and the surplus available to them. It's because you have your own beliefs about what it means to succeed. You may have set very high goals, and you may be working extremely hard to achieve them. But, if your limiting beliefs are preventing you from doing so, you will never reach your full potential. You can only achieve the level of success that you are ready for.

Once upon a time, there was an honest and hard-working man who never hurt a fly. Pleased with his excellent work, a fairy magically appeared before him and told him that all the wealth and riches he wanted in life were now within his reach. 'Just go into a garden', said the fairy. There is a large treasure chest filled with gold, diamonds, rubies and other precious gems. "Go and claim it - it is all yours". Then she added: there is only one catch. There is a white rabbit in the garden. As you go looking for the treasure chest, you must not think about the white rabbit. If you do so, you won't be able to find the riches.

We all are like that man with a white rabbit. Our goals, our dreams and our just deserts are within our reach. But we are held back by our self-limiting beliefs. We blame our boss, employer, family etc. Our own white rabbit prevents us from raising our full potential and achieving our goals and stops us from doing what it takes to get to our goals. There is a comfort in blaming the white rabbit.

What is your white rabbit? Your favourite excuse for not doing what it takes to achieve your goals? It is good to identify it, banish it from your mind forever, and come out of your comfort zone.
